Hello Howard and Michelle,

So I think the Inappropriate Behavior in the bathrooms might need to be discussed at RLT with some direction on messaging. One of my employees refused to come into the office today because she is terrified after hearing a story on the train home last night: A male supervisor in ECEJ (she would not tell me who) told her that management knows that it is a female on the (b)(6) floor who has been wiping feces and menstrual blood on the walls (I'm really sorry, this is beyond gross) and that they are worried that her behavior is escalating. This supervisor said that managers were directed to share this information with staff and she feels that I am not being upfront with my staff with this same information.

She wants security on the (b)(6) floor to keep her safe from the dangerous woman who is definitely on the (b)(6) floor.

I (b)(6) and assured her that I knew no more than she did.

So, perhaps we need to caution supervisors in the way they are messaging this to staff?

Thanks,

(b)(6)
